developed, both socially and architecturally, covering a span of time equal to any Baltimore residential neighborhood. The make-up of the community has reflected the character of the nearby nineteenth century employment centers, such as the University of Maryland Hospital, the B&O Railroad Yards, and the Bartlett and Hayward Ironworks. Ridgely's Delight has always been a socially and economically mixed neighborhood with both blue collar employees of local industries and professionals, such as doctors and dentists employed at the University of Maryland's medical facilities. The district's residential structures represent the first phase of development for Baltimore's rowhouses, as well as later versions for working, middle and upper class residents. The unusual street pattern of Ridgely's Delight produces an intimate human scale, fine Vistas and irregular building sites and structures.

This building is a typical example of 2-story Ridgely's Delight rowhouses.
